From the Rectory

How well do you know the Bible? Can you quote chapter and verse? Do you have a Bible quote to hand for every occasion?

As a Priest people often assume that I must know the Bible inside out and back to front, every reference, every quotation, every character, where they lived, who they were related to and how many sheep they had. Their mouths drop open when I tell them that actually I hardly know the Bible at all. So much is assumed, whilst so little is understood. Make of that what you will.

I remember finding myself lifted out of my comfortable life and plonked down unceremoniously at theological college. It was an alien environment where people wandered about with their noses in weighty books and their thoughts filled with theories about theology. People in whose presence I sometimes felt very humble; wrongly so. I remember my first Systematics lecture. (Systematic Theology is a really dogmatic study of scripture and liturgy and what we believe and why we believe it). I thought, in my own simple way, that Systematics sounded like it must be a course for washing machine repairers. I made the mistake of voicing this once, which was met with a stony silence only broken by the sound of my feet as I scuttled away to die horribly of embarrassment. My sense of humour, a weapon I had used to great effect all my life, was a weapon now severely blunted in the hallowed halls of St John's College Durham where, sadly, some people had had theirs removed or disinfected.

Systematics lectures were studded with a bewildering array of theologians I had only heard of in passing, much less read about: Barth, Tillich, Bonhoeffer for instance. Though I did not comprehend much of the material at first, I felt very privileged to be able to mix in such awesome company.

The Junior Common Room was a place of equal torture for the inexperienced Bible student. A place where seemingly unanswerable questions were uttered and bandied about with the same ease as one might enquire about a railway timetable. What is the place of the bible in Christian tradition? What about Liberation theology? What about feminist theology? What are the creeds and councils of the church? What about tradition? Why does ontological radicality matter to the Kingdom? What time is the next train to London? And so for the first six months I struggled and wondered about my calling.

Had I misheard God's call? Was it right for me to be in such a place?
"Dear Lord, send me a sign...or an interpreter at least!!"

A sign duly arrived. I found another poor soul weighted down with the jargon, another person struggling to understand the code by which institutionalised theology had firmly locked up the scriptures. Then another and another and another, until, before long a whole gang of us had united in our common inability to understand "theology speak". It was like a weight had been lifted. Suddenly we realised that it was OK not to understand theology. It was OK not to have instant answers. It was OK to question the established theories. The theories of the so called "experts" are still only theories, not fact. For me, I discovered like a flash of dazzling light, that was the real beauty of theology. "Theology is the queen of sciences" said one person. "Its beauty lies in its mysteriousness, the truth of the gospel lies out there waiting to be discovered, in the meantime we can enjoy talking about it and learning from it as we get to know God"

How true. "Getting to know God" I Like that.

The Bible is many things to us.

It is story and song and poetry. It is faith and struggle and history and humanity and, in its latter days it is charged with the weighty but oh so humbling task of carrying the gospel message itself in a vernacular language that ALL God's people can understand.

That is our charge: To bring the Gospel message to the people of Denton, Woolsthorpe, Wyville, Stroxtan, and Harlaxton..... and beyond, but in ways that all can understand, and, from what I have witnessed so far, I think we are up to that challenge.

Easter cometh, and by the time you read this we shall be held firmly in its grasp. Easter is a time for renewal, not only of your Bible knowledge, but also of your faith in God, whether plain and simple or complex and knowledgeable. We are all the same to God in the end. Just knowing that, like fighter pilots in a great air battle, God counts us all out, and then counts us all back in again. Redeemed, worthy of his love and tucked back into the warmth and security of the fold. The shepherd not resting until the lost one is found. Are not two sparrows sold for a penny? Yet not one of them will fall to the ground unperceived by your Father. And even the hairs of your head are all counted. So do not be afraid; you are of more value than many sparrows. Matthew 10:29-31

Easter is a time for the greatest love of all, when Christ gave up his life for our sake upon the cross. What can we give that in any way matches such a gift? I suspect very little in comparison, we are only human.

Remember that ... we are only Human. And in a humane sort of way, God understands that and doesn't expect such a gift, our gift can be as little as a willingness to try. For it is only when we struggle and try, when we dare to lift our heads above the parapet, that God meets us there in the common ground, bible knowledge or none.

Jesus taught us how to pray, so maybe that is enough. It is enough to be going on for now at least.

Keep praying.

Have a happy and blessed Eastertide.
God bless.

Keith Hanson

The Bishop of Lincoln's Letter

Dear Friends

Let's give it up for Lent

We give up things for Lent, but at the same time Lent is about never giving up. It sounds as though we might have got ourselves into a bit of a muddle about what Lent is for, but if we have then there is a good reason why.

On the one hand, Lent recalls Jesus' 40 days in the wilderness where he lived on very little, kept himself to himself, and concentrated on preparing body and soul for the journey ahead of him. The least we can do is walk with him on wilderness way as a token of our commitment to follow him even at some cost to ourselves. So we use Lent as a time to give up something which matters to us in order to identify with Jesus in his period of abstinence.

On the other hand, the story which emerges most powerfully from Jesus' time in the wilderness, is the story of his temptations. tormented by hunger he was tempted to turn stones into bread; teased by the prospect of power, he was tempted to pay the devil homage; tested by the opportunity to put on a spectacular demonstration of his divine nature, he was tempted to throw himself off the temple parapet into the arms of his guardian angels.

But he resisted all these temptations to give up on his allotted task and so give in to the allure of power, possessions and prestige which so besmirch the image of God in those he was sent to save. That is why Lent is also a time to strengthen our resolve and reinforce our defences against "sin, the world and the devil" to use the time-honoured words of the Baptism Service. It is sometimes tough to live the life of true discipleship, but the lesson of Lent is that we must never give up.

Of course, giving up and not giving up are not mutually exclusive joining with him in his campaign of resistance. We give things up so as to concentrate on the spiritual resources we need in order never to give up on his call to carry our cross and follow him through the valley of death and onwards to the gate of glory.

We give up things for Lent, but at the same time Lent is about never giving up.

CHANGE
REPENTANCE
CONVERSION

FORTY DAYS . . .
. . . for a journey through the desert

Go, seek for the precious within yourself and others.
Don't just live, but discover
 what makes life meaningful.
Let go of that which binds
 and makes you estranged from yourself.
But hold fast to that which may not loosen
 the ancient holy vision of righteousness,
This is the dream of every person.

Then the desert of your life will bloom.

DO YOU CARE ABOUT THE TREATMENT OF THOSE IN PRISON?

MEMBERS OF INDEPENDENT BOARDS DO: TO CONTINUE THIS VITAL WORK
NEW MEMBERS ARE REQUIRED

There have been a number of articles in all sections of the media regarding the prison system and the perception that life inside is a bed of roses. The removal of a person's liberty and associated freedom is one of the most severe actions a state can take. Yes, it can be argued that if you commit crimes, you deserve punishment. Bear in mind that you or a member of your family could find themselves 'INSIDE' for a simple mistake or lack of attention whilst driving, or a huge raft of similar offences. How would you expect to be treated? Should not punishment be coupled with humane treatment and the desire to reform and prevent re-offending?

It is only a very small percentage of prisoners that are never released. The majority will at some time come out and join the rest of us in the community. Far better that they have been encouraged to turn their lives around by preparing for release with training and education programmes. Monitoring the standard of these programmes and how prisoners are treated and encouraged to reform is a difficult, but vital, undertaking. It is essential that it is carried out in a truly independent way, by trained people. The task is carried out by members of Independent Monitoring Boards.

Who are the Independent Monitoring Boards?

Inside every prison is an Independent Monitoring Board (IMB) made up of members of the community. They care about people; they are volunteers. Yet to say they are volunteers perhaps understates the role. They are volunteers with statutory duties and powers. Members of a Board are drawn from all sections, backgrounds and age groups within the community.

Board members have access to all parts of the prison. They have a duty to see that the treatment of prisoners is fair and reasonable. They also have a duty to monitor the adequacy and effectiveness of the programmes preparing prisoners for release. Board members talk directly to staff and prisoners to find out what is really going on.

Most of the public have never been inside a prison and may think they are unsafe places. But the Chief Inspector of Prisons, Ann Owers, says, “I feel more at risk on the streets walking home late at night than I do in prison”. That said, you do need to be sensible and avoid possibly difficult situations. The majority of prisoners realise that IMB members are there for their benefit, someone to turn to when all other avenues appear to be closed to them. Could you handle this tremendous responsibility?

What does it take to be a Member?

IMB members come from all backgrounds and walks of life. Nationally members range from 20—82 years of age. We are not looking for specific formal qualifications. Contact with the university life, wide experience, commonsense, a sense of fair play and an interested and caring outlook would help.

The challenges and issues that Board members monitor vary hugely—from prisoners’ lost property to lost visiting orders, from effective education programmes to lack of sufficient exercise time. You need to be open-minded, caring and have a willingness to challenge and take responsibility, looking to see if what you have been told, whether by a prisoner or a manager, is true. You will have individual responsibilities, but you also need to work as part of a team. Perhaps most importantly, you need time. The role is voluntary, but travel and subsistence expenses are covered. The fact that no payment is made, makes a Board truly independent.

If you are interested, what next?

Vacancies exist on the Boards of Ashwell, Glen Parva, Leicester and Stocken—all adult male prisons. If you would like to find out more about being an IMB member, please contact the IMB Clerk based at the prison you think may be of interest. They can arrange for the Chair, or another member of the Board, to tell you a bit more and show you around the prison, pointing out to you the real difference you can make.

FLORAL CELEBRATIONS

From time to time we have received enquiries from villagers who would like to celebrate a special occasion such as an anniversary, or to commemorate a loved one, with a floral arrangement in the church. Whilst being happy to donate flowers, many do not have the interest or ability to arrange them.

A rota of volunteers, with flower-arranging skills, has been formed so that any future requests can be met in a positive way.

If you would like to make a donation of money or flowers for any occasion, please contact either: Denise Butler on 569950 or Frances Warner on 566988.

All such donations will be acknowledged on the weekly Pew News sheet.

Retarded Grandparents

An American teacher asked her class to write about what they had done during the holidays. One child wrote:

We always used to spend the holidays with Grandma and Grandpa. They lived in a big brick house. Then Grandpa got retarded and they moved to Florida. Now they live in a tin box and have rocks painted green to look like grass. They ride around on their bicycles and wear name tags in case they get lost.

At the gate is a dolls' house with a little man in it. He watches all day so that nobody can escape. Sometimes they sneak out and go cruising on their golf carts! Also they go to a building called the wrecked center, but it seems to be OK. They do exercises there and swim in the pool.

Nobody there cooks, they just eat out. Some of the people can't get out past the man in the dolls' house. The ones who do get out, bring back food to the wrecked center for pot luck.

My Grandma says that my Grandpa worked hard all his life to earn his retardment and says I should work hard so I can be retarded some day too. When I earn my retardment, I want to be the man in the dolls' house. Then I will let people out to visit their grandchildren.

Duet

My father once had a cat named Moose,
A big tomcat,
And he would whistle for him
just like you whistle for a dog.
And my father would get a chair and sit down,
And when he came in , Moose would get on his lap.
Moose would whine, and my father would say:
Moose, where have you been,
I haven’t seen you all day!
And they had the conversation on the front porch,
And nobody knew what they were talking about.

MOWING MOANS

Spring is here a time for cheer
but for many it brings dismay;
We have to get the mower out
or the lawn will turn to hay.

Out it comes in last year's muck
I cross my fingers and toes,
Put petrol in and pull the cord
trust to luck and hope it goes.

Does it heck, what to do now
pull and pull, 'til I feel sick,
Now I'm down to my last resort
it responds to a swift kick.

Off we go, round and round
my trusty steed and I,
On our weekly journey
how I wish the grass was dry.

Long summer days and weeks of drought
you'll never see me frown,
A bonus of global warming
the lawn's a lovely shade of brown.

The miles I walk just in one season,
my thoughts have time to roam;
Before I wear my legs away
I should consider moving home

My ideal house, one up one down
and a yard just ten by ten,
With stunning views of Belvoir Vale
mowed by the Duke of Rutland's men!
